Description		This course aims to inform students of the theoretical, practical and methodological issues concerning Sociolinguistics, as well as the evolution of the answers to these issues in the continues debates in the area. In this course, we will explore the ways that language creates and reflects social identities. We will look at the contextual factors—social, cultural, geographical, political, etc.—that impact language use and variation. In essence, we will learn how language shapes our world, and how we shape language itself. Sociolinguistics is the descriptive study of the effect of any and all aspects of society, including cultural norms, expectations, and context, on the way language is used, and the effects of language use on society.
Objectives		The main objective of this course is: 1. To offer students in depth knowledge of the relation between the language and the social life and the characteristics of these relations. 2. To investigate language variation and the interplay between language and social identities, using qualitative and quantitative methods 3.To expand students knowledge as sociolinguist's aim is to move towards a theory which provides a motivated account of the way language is used in a community, and of the choices people make when they use language. 4. To help students understand that sociolinguistics is relevant in the process of teaching and learning a foreign language as a social adjustment factor.
